Having difficulty finding those luscious morel mushrooms this spring? See Mrs. Ernest Watters, who lives on the Dewey Cryder farm, Route 180, shown above, holding a box of bronze-colored morels. One of the five which filled the box, weighed 1¾ pounds. Mrs. Watters, who lives in the Centralia School spied the fleshy mushrooms growing around an old tree stump in the pony lot on the farm. "They have a better flavor than neighborhood, said her "eyes popped" Thursday, when she the smaller cone-shaped morels usually found in these parts at this season," comments Mrs. Watters.
